DESCRIPTION OF THE MAP.

THE SEVEN UNITED PROVINCES (which form the greater part of the Map annexed to this Journal), are bounded on the south by Austrian Flanders and Brabant; on the east by Germany; and on the north and west by the North Sea. They measure little more than 150 miles in length, and 100 in breadth, but contain 113 towns, 1400 villages, and about 2,400,000 inhabitants.

The United Provinces afford a striking proof that unwearied and perfevering industry is capable of conquering every disadvantage of climate and situation. The air and water are generally bad; the soil in most places naturally produces but little, and its possession, poor as it is, is disputed by the ocean, which, rising considerably above the level of the land, can only be prevented by strong and expensive dykes, from overflowing the whole country.—This small, and apparently insignificant territory, however, has, by perfevering labour, been rendered one of the richest spots in Europe, both with respect to population and property. The inhabitants carry on a very considerable woollen manufacture; have numberless artists employed in metals; a thousand sawmills are kept continually going; and a great quantity of beer is brewed and spirits distilled from corn; without their possessing the essential requisites for any of those articles: for they have neither numerous flocks, mines, forests, or agriculture to any extent. Their fisheries are conducted upon a great scale, and yield a clear profit of many thousand florins. Grazing of cattle is also made very lucrative, and they export a considerable quantity of butter and cheese. Foreign commerce, however, is more depended on than internal manufacture, and in this respect their trade extends to almost every part of the world, to the exclusion, in some branches, of all their European competitors.

These provinces were originally an assemblage of several Lordships dependent upon the kings of Spain; from whose yoke they relieved themselves during Philip IId's reign in 1579, under the Prince of Orange, and formed the Republic generally termed Holland, that being the most remarkable province.—Though united for the preservation of the whole, each single province is governed by its own laws. They guarantee each others rights, make war and peace, levy taxes, &c. in their joint capacity; but as to internal government each province is independent of the other provinces, and of the supreme power of the republic. They send Deputies to the General Assembly called the States General, which is vested with the supreme legislature power of the state. At the head of this republican government is the Prince Stadtholder or Captain General, who exercises a very considerable part of the executive power.—

This office in 1747 was made hereditary in the Prince of Orange's family, not excepting females.

The taxes are numerous and oppreſſive; ſcarce a neceſſary of life but what is aſſeſſed, even bread is not excepted. The whole revenue has been rated at two millions and a half; but in time of war, or in particular emergencies, all the taxes are raiſed.

Calviniſm is the eſtabliſhed religion, but others are tolerated.

The Dutch are a brave, induſtrious, and perſevering people, but avarice is their ruling paſſion; and ſo exceſſive is it, that they have not unfrequently bartered the national honour for temporary emolument. Every other emotion of the mind is ſubdued; and runs lower and cooler than elſewhere.

The military eſtabliſhment of the United Provinces in time of peace is not eaſily aſcertained, but is by no means conſiderable; each province keeping up only ſuch a number of troops as it can conveniently maintain. In time of war they have recourſe to mercenaries, who are chiefly Swiſs and Germans.—The fortreſſes are in general kept in good repair: and moſt of the towns afford a hiſtory of a ſiege (often obſtinate and bloody) during their conteſt with Spain.

The Dutch navy, in former times, made a reſpectable figure, both from the number of ſhips and the bravery of the ſeamen; but they have been gradually degenerating; and if we except the action with the Britiſh fleet on the Dogger bank in 1781, where their ancient valour ſeemed for the time revived, there is little remaining of that gallant ſpirit which diſtinguiſhed the Dutch commanders and ſeamen of former generations.

During the preſent war their fleet has been totally inactive; from what cauſe this proceeds cannot at preſent be aſcertained; and it muſt for ſome time remain a myſtery whether this ſupineneſs is owing to the prevalence of the French intereſt; diſaffection to their own government; a particular diſlike to the conteſt into which they allege they have been forced; or to that phlegmatic and characteriſtic indifference which has of late operated ſo deſtructively in all the public proceedings the Dutch are concerned with.

The provinces are, Guelderland, Holland, Utrecht, Zeeland, Friſland, Overyſſel, and Groningen.

1. GUELDERLAND is bounded on the north by the Zuyder Zee and Overyſſel; eaſt by Munſter and Cleves; ſouth by Brabant; and weſt by Utrecht and Holland. The ſoil is good, and the air the beſt of all the provinces. It is watered by the Rhine and its three branches the Waal, Yſſel, and Lek, and by the Maeſe. It has 22 towns; the places of note are,

Nimeguen, ſtanding on ſeveral little eminences along the Waal, over which it had a bridge of boats, which was deſtroyed when the place was evacuated by the Duke of York's army in November 1794. It is pretty ſtrongly fortified, but the great extent of its out-works requires a very numerous garriſon. In 1678 the celebrated treaty of Nimeguen was concluded here.

Zutphen, on the bank of the Yſſel, over which there is a bridge of boats, is 55 miles eaſt by ſouth from Hanover. It is well fortified, and where weakeſt may be laid under water.

Arnheim, on the Rhine, the head-quarters (December 1794) of the Britiſh army, is tolerably fortified, its works on the land ſide having been enlarged by that ſkilful engineer General Coehorn in 1702, who alſo incloſed within a ſtrong line an eminence to the weſt of the town, which in caſe of a ſiege might be a great annoyance to it, but is now capable of containing a ſmall camp for its defence.

Thiel, a town of conſiderable ſtrength, ſurrounded on one ſide by moraſſes, is about 17 miles weſt from Nimeguen. Part of the Britiſh forces are cantoned here (December 1794).

Bommel, ſurrounded by the Maeſe and Waal ſo as to form an iſland, in a military view, is alſo a place of ſome importance. Fort St Andre, in its vicinity, is capable of a ſtrong reſiſtance.

2. HOLLAND, the largeſt of the provinces, is bounded on the eaſt by Gueldreland and Utrecht; ſouth by Brabant; north the Zuyder Zee; and weſt the North Sea. It lies low, in ſome places below the level of the ſea, from which it is ſecured by dykes and dams. It is interſected by innumerable canals. The air is foggy and unwholeſome, but the province is notwithſtanding very populous, the inhabitants being computed at 1,200,000.

Amſterdam, one of the principal trading cities in Europe, is ſituated at the influx of the Y and the Amſtel. The harbour, though difficult of acceſs, is capacious and ſafe, and communicates by inland navigation with moſt of the principal towns.—The city is interſected by canals, which, while they contribute to convenience and cleanlineſs, in hot weather are detrimental to health. Amſterdam is built on piles driven into the moraſs on which it is placed. The place is well fortified, and the neighbouring country may be laid under water. In 1787, however, it ſubmitted to the Pruſſians under the Duke of Brunſwick, on being threatened with a bombardment. It is governed by a ſenate of 36 members, who hold their office for life, and 12 burgomaſters. Its trade is immenſe to the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, Spain, Italy, &c. Amſterdam is about 190 miles from London, and 240 from Paris.

Rotterdam a large and populous city, is ſeated on the Maeſe, with a moſt excellent harbour, capable of receiving ſhips of the greateſt burden.—It is next in conſequence to Amſterdam.—There are a number of Engliſh and Scots inhabitants here, who have churches and miniſters of their own.

The Hague is a beautiful village, abounding with agreeable walks, elegant streets, with magnificent and regular buildings. It is the residence of the Stadtholder, and the states assemble here.

Leyden, celebrated for its university, is a large and regular city; the streets are long and broad, and adorned with canals.

Dort, is situated in an island on the Meuse, that was formed in 1421 by a dreadful inundation, which destroyed 72 villages and about 100,000 persons.

Horlem, is about 14 miles from Amsterdam, with which it communicates by canals. It is fortified with a wall, but is not considered as of any strength. It is large and populous.

Williamstadt, on Holland ship, is celebrated for its gallant defence against the French in 1793, who were obliged to abandon the siege.

Helvoetsluys has an excellent harbour, and is the station of the packet boats to England. Part of the Dutch navy is generally moored here.

Delft, about 30 miles from Amsterdam, is a clean well built town, remarkable for its manufactory of fine earthen ware.

The Texel is a small island at the mouth of the Zuyder Zee, divided from the continent by a narrow channel, through which most ships pass to Amsterdam. It has a strong castle and a numerous garrison.

3. ZEELAND consists entirely of islands, formed by the many outlets of the Scheldt. It is bounded on the east by Brabant, south by Flanders; west by the North Sea; and on the north by Holland.

The islands of Walcheren and Schouwen are defended on the west side against the violence of the sea by downs or sandhills, and on the other sides by vast dykes, formed with immense labour and expence. The soil of these islands is fertile, and produces excellent wheat. South Beveland and North Beveland are two pleasant well peopled islands. They suffered greatly by a terrible inundation in 1530, in which great numbers of people and cattle perished. The whole province contains 11 cities and 110 villages; but the only places of note are Middleburg, in Walcheren, a rich, populous, and strong town. It is fortified with a wall, strengthened by 13 bastions. It communicates with the West Scheldt by a canal capable of receiving large ships.

Flushing, or as the Dutch call it, Vlissingen, is situated at the mouth of the West Scheldt, and defends the passages into Zeeland and Flanders. Its harbour is large and secure, and will admit up to the town a fleet of the largest men of war. It is otherwise well fortified.

4. UTRECHT is wholly environed by Holland and Guelderland, excepting a small slip of land to the northward, which borders on the Zuyder Zee. The soil is fruitful, and the air so fubrious; the country not being entirely level, but abounding in fmall eminences. It has five cities, and 65 towns and villages, but the principal are Utrecht, fituated in a delightful country, on the Rhine, which here divides itſelf into two branches, and theſe traverſe the city through its whole length, and then unite again. The place is large and populous, but has no other defence than a wall of inconſiderable ſtrength. Here the union of the Seven Provinces took place in 1579; and in 1713 the celebrated treaty between the Allies and France, called the Treaty of Utrecht.

Amerſfort, a ſtrong town, 14 miles from Utrecht.

5. FRIESLAND is bounded on the eaſt by Groningen; ſouth by Overyſſel; weſt by the Zuyder Zee; and north by the North Sea. Its air and ſoil reſemble thoſe of the province of Holland, like which it lies low, is ſecured from the ſea by dykes, and interſected throughout by canals.

Leuwarden is the capital, a rich, populous, and at one period a ſtrong town, but the fortifications have been neglected. It was formerly the reſidence of the Stadtholder.

6. OVERYSSEL is bounded on the north by Friſeland; eaſt by Munſter; ſouth by Gueldorland; and weſt by the Zuyder Zee. The ſoil is generally toarſhy. Its principal town

Deventer, on the Yſſel, is ſurrounded by a wall, ſtrengthened by baſtions and outworks.

Campen is a large port on the Yſſel, over which there is a wooden bridge of curious ſtructure, 723 feet long and 23 broad.

7. GRONINGEN, bounded on the north by the German Ocean; eaſt by Munſter; ſouth by Drenthe; and weſt by Friſeland; lies low, and abounds in fine paſtures, with a portion of corn land.

Groningen, the capital, is a handſome city, with a univerſity. Its fortifications, once conſiderable, are now ruinous.

The Generality Lands, as they are termed, are thoſe parts of the Netherlands that have been ſubdued by the Seven United Provinces, and ceded to them by treaty. The principal towns are Breda, a well fortified city, taken by the French in 1793; but retaken ſoon after. It derives much of its ſtrength from its being practicable to lay the ſurrounding country under water.

Bergen-op-Zoom, celebrated for the variety of ſieges it has undergone, lies about 20 miles weſt of Breda. It is reckoned one of the ſtrongeſt places in the Netherlands.

Maeſtricht and Bois-le-Duc, which have lately ſurrendered to the French, are alſo in this diviſion of the Netherlands.

Emmerick, in the dutchy of Cleves, is a large fortified town on the eaſt ſide of the Rhine.

 In the Map, as well as in the above deſcription, no notice has been taken of the inſignificant places, in order that thoſe of importance might be rendered diſtinct and intelligible.
